The concept of utilizing squash as a medium for urban youth development, or “urban squash”, a term coined by its pioneer Greg Zaff through his program, SquashBusters (Boston) in 1996 is a growing phenomenon around the United States and the rest of the world.

Since 1996, ten other successful urban squash programs have sprung up in larger cities such as New York, Philadelphia and Chicago leading to the creation of the National Urban Squash & Education Association \(NUSEA\), an umbrella organization which provides guidance to a number of emerging independent urban squash programs.

Results speak louder than words - 100% of urban squash students graduate from high school and 93% of urban squash graduates attend college.
